Hiring Team
Naptha AI

Dear Naptha Team,

What you're building hits me right in the center of what I care about most—intelligent infrastructure, systems that scale, and working alongside people who aren't afraid of hard problems. I'm not a CEO by title, but I've spent the last decade operating like one: building cross-functional systems, leading product-adjacent teams, and helping translate early-stage chaos into strategic clarity.

At SpiderOak, I led operations through a post-Series C scale-up—owning internal systems, martech and GTM infrastructure, and onboarding architecture. I also ran point on strategic planning, internal tooling, and feedback loops between engineering, product, and customer-facing teams. More recently, I've been experimenting heavily with LLM agents (via Cursor and OpenAI API), rethinking what internal enablement, onboarding, and decision support could look like in an agent-first world.

What excites me most about Naptha is your invitation to co-design a role based on what someone brings—not just what's been done before. I'd love to contribute on the side of strategic operations, agent-infused enablement systems, or vertical GTM motion—wherever my mix of systems fluency, product empathy, and early-stage experience can be most useful.

Thanks for considering. I'd love to connect and talk about what's next.

Warmly,
Adam Tervort
