Hiring Team
Stripe

Dear Stripe Team,

Reading this job description genuinely lit me up. I've followed Stripe for years—Stripe's developer docs were one of the first places I felt like I could get technical—and seeing a strategy role that prioritizes first-principles thinking, intellectual rigor, and collaborative problem-solving? That's rare air.

In my last several roles at SpiderOak, I've led cross-functional initiatives that range from customer success to operational planning to product strategy. My job has often been to zoom out, find the friction points across disciplines, and help teams move faster with more clarity. I've worked on everything from scaling post-Series C infrastructure to shaping internal investment decisions to coaching leaders on how to align execution with strategy.

What draws me to this role isn't just the scope—it's the chance to think with other sharp, curious people about where the business should go next. I love exploring what's possible, stress-testing ideas, and identifying where the real levers are. Stripe's mission to increase the GDP of the internet is wildly ambitious, and it'd be a privilege to help steer the next chapters.

If it sounds like we might click, I'd love to talk more.

Warmly,
Adam Tervort
