Hiring Team
Product School

Dear Product School Team,

Over the past decade, I've built and led operations across sales, marketing, customer success, and engineering—from systems to people to strategy. What drew me to Product School's VP of Operations role is the clarity of the challenge: helping a fast-growing team scale with precision, accountability, and heart. That's what I do best.

When I took over engineering at SpiderOak, one of my first challenges was integrating two engineering orgs and revamping our product planning process. We spent months learning product management from scratch—and a lot of money bringing in consultants to train the team. It was worth it, but I remember thinking how valuable it would've been to have something like Product School: a platform that could upskill entire teams with real-world product knowledge, at scale. I've seen firsthand how the right product education transforms a team's ability to ship, collaborate, and grow.

At SpiderOak, I've directed enterprise-wide operations and led the implementation of systems like Salesforce, Okta, and 0365. I've built GTM support infrastructure, unified revenue and marketing tooling, run planning cadences (OKRs, QBRs), and delivered dashboards that drive strategic clarity. I know how to align teams, manage performance, and translate strategy into execution—and I love helping organizations scale thoughtfully.

Thanks for considering my application. I'd be excited to connect and help support Product School's next chapter.

Warmly,
Adam Tervort
